

My husband and I found Ed through a random google search for "german shorthair puppies in Wisconsin" Almost one year later I can honestly say it was the best google search I have ever made. I called and talked to Ed and it turned out that they were expecting puppies in about a month (January 2011). My husband and I were first time dog owners although I had had experience with hunting dogs throughout my childhood and from the moment we met Ed and his wife Emily we knew it was the perfect match for us. When we went over to his house the first time we were a little nervous and not sure what to expect. He is absolutely one of the most nice and easy going men I have ever met and we quickly became very comfortable. He showed us all of his dogs and within moments of meeting him you could tell that dog breeding wasn't just about money for him, it was one of his passions. His knowledge and expertise about dogs has been so helpful to us. Being first time dog owners we encountered many questions along the way. Our relationship with Ed and Emily has continued to grow even after taking our dog, Bailey, home with us. There have been so many times when I needed training advice and he has ALWAYS been there to help guide us through. We sent Bailey to Ed for "puppy training school" when she was four months old. There she was introduced to birds, general obedience and hunting training. I was amazed when she came back. She listened so well for a puppy so young and we were thrilled! She would kennel and come on command. At almost one year old she has surpassed all of my goals from a hunting standpoint. She is going to be an amazing hunter. You can tell Ed chooses very carefully which dogs are bred and he does an outstanding job. Bailey is more than a dog to us. She is an amazing house pet and companion. I could not have dreamt a better dog if I tried. Ed and Emily are amazing people and I would never buy a german shorthair from anyone else. My husband and I are already talking about getting another one in spring! I can honestly say that you will not go wrong with getting a dog from Ed.
